Census Search

Census records are probably the most important source for tracing your ancestors back to the early 19th century. Since 1841 United Kingdom census records have listed the people in each home together with details of their lives. These records are kept private for 100 years before being released for public viewing.

What do they tell us?

The information provided in censuses increased with every decade. The records are organised by address, so, the first thing you can see is where your relatives lived. You'll also find a list of all the names within that household – these are likely to be more of your ancestors as they're usually spouses, parents or children of the people you are searching for.

The censuses only listed the names of the people in the house on the day the census was taken. You may find that a family member was living elsewhere for work or financial reasons or had married or died.

British families often named children following a simple set of rules; 1st son after father's father, 2nd son after mother's father, 3rd son after father, 1st daughter after mother's mother, 2nd daughter after father's mother and 3rd daughter after mother. This often gives us a starting point to trace their parents and can often verify that you have traced the correct people.

In the United Kingdom 1841 census adults' ages were rounded down to the nearest five years, and people were simply asked whether they were born in that country. From 1851, though, you'll find each person's correct age (assuming they were honest, could count or remember their birth date), along with a more precise place of birth. It should be noted though that the information given here may contain some inaccuracies due to misinterpretation of the original written record.

The dates for births, marriages and deaths in the family tree for Elizabeth Baxter Dick are accurate if found from actual record copies of these events. Where the dates are taken only from census returns they may not be accurate and are assigned a circa (c) mark. Where this mark is used the dates are usually accurate to within two or three years.

Marriage information is taken from the actual marriage record copies that were found during the research. Not all of the marriage records of the family tree members are listed in this report. We only require full marriage details when we need to find further information from the record, e.g. dates, occupations and parents' names.

This report also includes military records and newspaper articles for some of the family tree members.

Direct descendants of Elizabeth are listed in bold.

Right, from the Southern Reporter of 7 September 1899, a small article reporting a relatively small fine for George Muir Pryde (1867 – 1947) and his sister.

George Pryde, dyker, Dalkeith, and Jessie Pryde, his sister, residing in Meigle Street, Galashiels, were each fined 2s 6d, or one day for creating a breach of the peace. A

A mason named George Pryde, whose wife resides at Cuddy-side, came there while under the influence of drink late on Saturday night. He was admitted and took his first sleep on the floor. Awakening in the small hours, he commenced to throw the furniture and crockery about the room, to the alarm of his wife, who, after remonstrating with him, fled from the house with her three children, accused throwing a poker and a part of the grate after them. He then barricaded himself in the house, and the police had to enter by a window to arrest him. Pryde denied the crime, but was convicted on evidence, and in default of paying a fine of £3 went to prison for fourteen days.

This newspaper extract, left, is from the Southern Reporter from 16 February 1905 and reports an offence by George Muir Pryde (1867 – 1947) against his wife, Elizabeth Baxter (1866 – 1931), and their children, at their home in Peebles.

This newspaper extract, right, is from the Edinburgh Evening News from 24 December 1932 and is a notice posted in memory of Elizabeth Baxter Pryde (1866 – 1931) by her family.

PRYDE.—In memory of our loving mother, ELIZABETH BAXTER PRYDE, who died at 17 High Street, Portobello, on Christmas morning, 1931; also our dear brother JIM, who died of wounds, October 19th, 1918.
 I oftentimes sit and wish my wish could be fulfilled. My wish it would be to bring my darling mother back to me.
 [Inserted by her daughter and son-in-law and grandchildren, Mr and Mrs Dick, 85 High St., Portobello.
 One year has gone, my heart's still sore;
 As time goes on I miss my dear mother more.
 [Inserted by her daughter and son-in-law and family, Mr and Mrs Weepers, 81 East Swinton Street, Kirkcaldy.
 I once had a place I could call my home;
 Now dear granny's gone, and so has my home.
 [Inserted by her granddaughter Lizzie.]
